Oscar Hoy Killed.

A deplorable accident occurred at three o'clock Saturday afternoon at the E. and O. crossing at Market and Railroad streets, when an east bound through freight train crushed the life of Oscar Hoy. The young man who has been in the employ of Murray and Tarkley, the Buffalo street feed merchants for the past year, was driving one of the firm's empty motor trucks, when, upon reaching the crossing, he sighted the moving train, and at once applied the brake, which owing to the slippery condition of the street, would not hold, the car skidding directly in front of the engine. The machine was hurled into the air and carried a distance of thirty yards, the boy being thrown under the train, severing both lower limbs at the knee and causing instant death. There were no other passengers in the car, although another boy had alighted a moment before the accident. The unfortunate young man was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Elijah Hoy, and lived with his parents, three miles west of the city. He was twenty years of age, and in addition to his parents, is survived by three brothers and three sisters.

The funeral was held from the family home today, with interment in the Logansport cemetery, the Furber company having charge.

Baptist Revival.

Revival meetings at the first Baptist church which have been in session for the past two weeks, are drawing good congregations nightly, under the conduct of Evangelists A. D. Muse and Sam Raborn, and the pastor, Rev. W. M. Jennings. There have been an encouraging number of conversions, to date. Good music is rendered by the choir, and pipe organ each evening, and all are cordially invited to attend.

Dies Suddenly.

Mrs. James T. Flynn died after a few hours illness Friday at twelve o'clock p. m. at her home at Brink ten miles west of the city. Mrs. Flynn had, during the day, been in her usual health, becoming ill during the evening. Growing worse, medical aid was hurriedly summoned, but nothing could be done to save her life. Mrs. Flynn was the widow of the late James T. Flynn and formerly lived in Pleasant street near the Presbyterian church in this city. She is survived by two sons, Clyde, living at Brink, and Sherman, living in Kentucky, her husband having died several years ago. She was aged about sixty years.

The funeral services, the date of which had not been announced at the time of this writing, will be held from the home with interment at Brink, under the direction of Frank H. Huey.

REPORT HIGH PRICES TO FOOD CONTROLLER

Merchants Should be Contented With Reasonable Prices, Says Oglebay.

The Food Administrator of West Virginia reports that "Unfortunately many papers have stated that the Food Administrator of West Virginia has fixed the retail price of cane sugar at 14c. The Food Administrator has not fixed any price. But the Price Interpretation committee of Wheeling has said that beet sugar should be sold at not over 9c and cane sugar at 10c and 11c. These prices seem to afford the retailer a reasonable profit and sugar should not be sold higher except in rare cases where the retailer must haul his supplies a long distance. If higher prices are charged consumers will help themselves and this department as well by reporting the name and address of the offender."

"Merchants should show their patriotism by selling at reasonable prices and if that is all they are called upon to do in this war they are getting off easily compared with our boys who are headed for the trenches. 'In this connection we are glad to say that you will soon be able to get cane sugar at about 9c per pound. This does not mean that it will be particularly plentiful. You must continue to economize.'"

Mr. Hoover says: "Go back to the simple life, be contented with simple food, simple pleasures, simple clothes. Work hard, pray hard, play hard. Work, eat, recreate and sleep. Go it all courageously. We have a victory to win."

Evening Chat

Credit "To Whom" C. I. D. A poem which appears in the Hampshire Review (formerly edited by Governor Cornwall) and which has been widely printed after going the rounds of the government employees at Washington, was written by Will M. Cressy, a vaudeville actor, and was first printed in The New York Star:

My Tuesdays are meatless.
My Wednesdays are wheatless.
I am getting more eatless each day.
My home it is heatless.
My bed it is sheetless.
They're all sent to the Y. M. C. A.

The bar-rooms are treatless.
My coffee is sweetless.
Each day I get poorer and wiser.
My stockings are feelless.
My trousers are seatless.
Mr. How I do hate the Kaiser.

Rev. Dr. Stoetzer said last evening: So often we make our blessings of the past an argument for future blessings. Someone has truly said—oppression is the greatest means of success. We've heard the story of the princess who wanted to possess three very wonderful things and who sent her brother and lover to the top of a mountain in search of the bird who talked.

When they failed to return, the princess went herself so determined was she to have her wish. After a long weary climbing she reached the top. The bird said—get some of the water nearby and pour it on the stones about you and they will come to life. The stones became living men. The biggest things lie on the top of mountains and our obstacles and difficulties are the things upon which we stand to see greater distances. We can make even dead things live if we will.

Some people are so correct and so moral that they are satisfied with themselves instead of letting the blessings carry them on to better things.

Let us remember we must be bigger than any pile of dirt in the world. There is no depth so low man has not been able to sound as the depths of our hearts. We must be high or so hard that man hasn't climbed. Peter the Great said—I learned from my enemies how to defeat them. If you want success look around for something to be done that has never been done before and then do it. Dr. Stoetzer said last evening shows me what I can do—my foe what I should do.

Last night and the night before many families in the city suffered from cold. The wind howled like some demon had let loose. Houses rocked on the hill-tops. Like birds' nests in windy trees. Windows rattled—heating stoves shook as small members of the wind family ran up and down chimneys and poked inquisitiveness into ventilating pipes—screen doors left up banged back and forth—house doors slammed and through it all feeble fires sighed. The gas pressure was very uncertain; grown members of the family slept with one eye open for fear such fire as there was would suddenly take a notion to die. Fire in the basement of some homes kept burning so that pipes would not freeze, were constantly investigated. On High street a hungry mouse tried a number of times to get to the cupboard and every time he slid carefully out—a huge person came walking across the floor on the way to the ceiling. Cellar heaters blew out but were discovered in time and altogether one's night duties were as strenuous as day work.

As forcovers—many went to bed partly dressed—overcoats, bathrobes, portieres and any other warm article suddenly loomed up in the imagination as an appropriate covering, were gathered together and distributed. Noses all over the city stayed discreetly under during the weird howlings of the night. One wondered how it would feel to sleep out-of-doors or with one's head out of the window under a tent for one's health. Then one wondered no longer but drifted away into warmer regions—for an hour or two.
